[...] Dmitry Polyansky, Russia's acting envoy to the UN, set forth a multilateral security concept. He emphasized that the partnership would be a genuine international coalition acting within the framework of the UN Security Council. The proposal, which China has backed, would include all stakeholders for the safety of shipping through the vital Persian Gulf, including Iran. This is surely the way to go towards de-escalating the dangerous tensions in the region. The key is that any such initiative must be formulated in keeping with UN principles and international law. It is not for one, two or three nations to assume the role of naval "policemen" in an area of international waterways. Even if we take Washington's rhetoric about "protecting shipping" at face value, its deployment of force in the Gulf is an illegitimate assumption of power. It is outside UN principles and without Security Council mandate. In a word, illegal. [...]"

By Jak Fraam

“[...] Paris and Berlin refused to participate in the operation, not only because it contradicts their economic interests, but also because they don’t have military capabilities to influence US actions.[...].”

“[...] France and Germany, unlike South Korea and Japan, don’t like naval adventures, ranging from the simplest maneuvers to a demonstration of power in a region that is extremely hot.

But from a political point of view, the refusal of Paris and Berlin to participate in the operation proves a growing split between the NATO countries. Firstly, the European parties of the nuclear deal are unhappy that the EU countries have come under secondary sanctions against Iran. Secondly, a split with Britain, which supported the US initiative, is also obvious.[...].”
